INTERNET COMPANIES PRAISE CHARTER'S INTERCONNECTION POLICY

Netflix: "Netflix has reviewed Charter's new peering policy and its commitment to extend this policy to the Time Warner Cable and Bright House footprints. Netflix's longstanding support for an open interconnection policy is designed to ensure that consumers get the online content they want at the broadband speeds they pay for. Charter's new peering policy is a welcome and significant departure from the efforts of some ISPs to collect access tolls on the Internet. Charter's policy will promote efficient interconnection with online content providers and with the transit and content delivery services that smaller online content providers rely on to reach their consumers. Charter's endorsement of the policy as an enforceable merger condition will ensure that consumers will receive the fast connection speeds they expect. Netflix believes that this new policy and the commitment to apply it across the 'New Charter' footprint is a substantial public interest benefit and will support scaling the Internet to meet consumers' growing demand for online services and help foster continued innovation across the Internet ecosystem. Accordingly, Netflix supports the proposed Charter Time Warner Cable transaction if it incorporates the merger condition proposed by Charter." (Christopher Libertelli, Netflix Notice of Exparte, FCC, 7/15/15)

Reed Hastings, Chief Executive of Netflix: "The key thing about the Charter deal is it's all Internet companies that benefit - us, Hulu, Amazon, HBO Now - so that we can all compete for consumers' affection. And that is the openness to everybody that's the key thing." (Emily Steel, "Netflix Posts Mixed Results, but New Memberships Surge," The New York Times, 7/15/15)

Cogent: "Charter's announcement today of a policy to interconnect on a settlement free peering basis with other Internet service and content providers promotes the virtuous circle of innovation that has characterized the Internet since its inception. It will allow Charter's customers to have the widest possible access to Internet services and products; in essence, it ensures freedom of choice. Uncongested interconnection among the networks that compose the Internet is essential to the continued growth of the Internet and the innovative services it provides to consumers. Charter has set an example for the industry by respecting the tradition among Internet networks of interconnecting without the exchange of payments and augmenting connections as necessary to maximize the efficient use of the Internet. Charter's commitment represents a significant public interest benefit of the merger. Given Charter's history of open interconnection, its willingness to enter into an enforceable merger condition embodying open interconnection, and the example it sets for the Internet community, Cogent supports the merger.” (Robert Beury Jr, Letter to Marlene Dortch, FCC, 7/15/15)

COMPTEL: “COMPTEL is pleased that Charter has offered modifications to its Internet interconnection policy that promotes consumer access and choice to over-the-top content and will maintain a policy of no access charges. Charter’s offer to maintain this policy as a condition to its merger goes a long way in addressing concerns that the proposed merger would result in a large ISP with the size and capability to harm the development of online content, apps, and services and harm the open Internet. Today, Charter’s commitment on Internet interconnection policy further promotes the industry standard on settlement free peering for transit providers, CDNs, and content providers. This is a free market approach that all ISPs should readily adopt to promote an open Internet, and it is a commitment that should be made in all similar mergers. Specifically, we urge the Commission to ask AT&T why it isn’t willing to adopt the same policy with respect to its pending merger with DirecTV. COMPTEL continues to review other aspects of the proposed Charter merger, and we are withholding our endorsement of the merger at this time. Nonetheless, we are very pleased to see that Charter has made a significant commitment with respect to its Internet interconnection policy, and we commend it for this progress.” (Press Release, “Charter’s Peering Policy Move Good News for Open Internet, Over-the-Top Growth,” COMPTEL, 7/15/15)

Internet Association President and CEO Michael Beckerman issued the following statement on the interconnection provision of the Charter Merger: “The Internet industry strongly supports competition, choice, and abundance in the broadband access market. Open and efficient interconnection practices ensure that users have the fast and affordable Internet access necessary for the Internet to continue to flourish. Against this backdrop, interconnection should not be used as a choke point to artificially slow Internet traffic. While the Internet Association takes no position on the proposed merger itself, open interconnection policies, like the one Charter has offered as a merger condition, are good for the Internet’s users and the broader ecosystem.” (Statement, “Statement on the Interconnection Condition of the Charter Merger,” The Internet Association, 7/16/15)
