ITEM 8.01 Other Events

Southern Copper Corporation's subsidiary, Mexicana de Cobre, S.A. de C.V. (Mexcobre), announced that, as of September 2, 2010 a group of followers of the fugitive Napoleon Gomez Urrutia, former leader of the Mexican Mining Union, were impeding, through violent actions and other forms of intimidation, the ability of a majority of Mexcobre's workers to enter its smelter and refinery complex.

The copper refinery is operating at reduced capacity using Mexcobre's employees and a reduced number of unionized workers. Mexcobre is also performing planned maintenance work with outside contractors.

Mexcobre has formally demanded that state authorities increase the presence of security forces at Esqueda town in Sonora, located approximately 22 km from its industrial facilities, which is where most of its workers and employees reside.

Mexcobre has started to notify all of its clients and suppliers about this commercial force majeure situation.

Mexcobre does not expect these events to have a material economic impact, because it intends to sell copper concentrates on the international market at favorable terms while this situation continues.
