Tyco/JCI Merger FAQs Background; Integration 5.18.2016

Background

What is happening?

Johnson Controls has entered into a definitive merger agreement with Tyco, a global fire and security provider, to create the multi-industrial leader in building products and technology, energy storage and integrated solutions.

Why are we doing this?

Growth. Johnson Controls and Tyco combined will create a stronger company that will be better positioned for success in the future. The merger will connect comprehensive portfolios of controls, HVAC, fire and security, and energy systems to advance unique capabilities in technology and application expertise including design, installation and value-added services. Johnson Controls and Tyco have complementary branch networks and access to independent channels for global growth, which will help enhance revenue and earnings growth opportunities.

What is Tyco?

Tyco, headquartered in Cork, Ireland, is the world's largest dedicated fire protection and security company. Its 57,000 employees in more than 900 locations take a consultative approach to deliver tailored, industry-specific solutions, and its global reach allows it to anticipate changes across geographies and industries, and deploy the right solutions rapidly.

When is the transaction expected to close?

The merger is expected to close on Oct. 1, 2016.

Why a merger and not an acquisition?

Johnson Controls' decision to merge with Tyco completes a vision for a combined company, which brings together two advantaged, complementary industries. Given the size and value of both Tyco and Johnson Controls following the spinoff of Adient, a merger is the most appropriate approach to combine the two companies. The merger reflects united leadership and a "best of both" approach as we work through the details of integration to ensure our near-term and long-term success.

Does this mark the end of Johnson Controls' transformation journey?

This is a key milestone in our strategy to transform Johnson Controls into a recognized multi-industrial global company. When this integration is complete, our business portfolio will fully reflect this vision. However, as our world continues to shift and evolve, so will Johnson Controls. Portfolio management will be an ongoing part of strategic plans as we make continued investments in our growth platforms around buildings and energy. With that said, we will have an unwavering focus on first closing the Tyco transaction and then ensuring it will be integrated successfully.

Why combine now before the automotive spin is completed? Isn't the deal simpler after the separation?

This is an opportune time for both companies to make our strategic moves. It is also beneficial to have the vision and operating requirements for the new company in mind as we continue to work through the separation of Adient.

Integration details

Why not domicile in the U.S.?

Tyco is already domiciled in Ireland. There are benefits for being domiciled there, which makes Ireland the best choice for shareholders. In addition, the majority of our revenue and employee population are based outside of the United States. Keeping the Irish domicile retains maximum flexibility to invest in growth opportunities everywhere around the world, including in the United States.

Where will the new company be headquartered?

The combined company's corporate headquarters will be in Cork, Ireland. Our North America operational headquarters will be in Milwaukee, Wis, and our Asia Pacific operational headquarters will be in Shanghai, China.

Will Johnson Controls still be listed on the New York Stock Exchange?

Yes. The combined company will be listed on the New York Stock Exchange under the ticker symbol JCI .

What will happen to the Johnson Controls brand?

The merged company will use the Johnson Controls name and logo.

How will Alex Molinaroli and George Oliver split responsibilities?

Edgar Filing: JOHNSON CONTROLS INC - Form 425

At the close of the merger, Alex Molinaroli will remain as chairman and CEO, and George Oliver will become president and chief operating officer with reporting responsibility for the business units and leadership of integration. 18 months after the merger, George will become CEO, and Alex will become Executive Chairman for a 12-month period. After that time, George will become CEO and chairman.

Have other key management positions been decided?

No. Organizational decisions, including details related to the Board of Directors and senior management, will be determined through the integration process and announced as those details become available.

How will the businesses be integrated?

Tyco and Johnson Controls are merging. The integration of world-class controls, HVAC, and fire and security businesses will be addressed through a comprehensive integration plan in place by the time the merger closes.

While we can focus on planning the integration before closing, both companies will continue to act independently until the merger is finalized.
