The following is a partial transcript of a conference that was made available on the Company's website on November 29, 2018.

Sarah Elizabeth James (Piper Jaffray Companies, Research Division - Senior Research Analyst): Okay. Moving on to the Animal Health side. Post the spin-out, how is this sort of rebranding and effort resonating with customers? How are your conversations going on for new sales for that? And historically, I think the top line for that unit was high single, low double digits. So post the spin-out, has that growth trajectory changed?

Steven Paladino (Henry Schein, Inc. - Executive VP, CFO & Executive Director): Well, I would say, as far as branding, ultimately, the Animal Health business will not carry the Henry Schein name. We do have a transition period to allow the spun-off company to use the Henry Schein name. I think it's for 6 months and then transition to whether they're going to use Vets First Choice or another name. I think they're still thinking it through. So we want to give them adequate time to transition the branding to a new name. But right now, I think it's business as usual with customers. They're not thinking about the spin, doesn't really impact them. Our goal is to continue to service them really well. We did have strong growth even in Q3, when you normalize to agency, 6.7% in North America. It's important for people to look at the normalized number because the agency sales distort due growth of the business. And I would say that Animal Health still is at least U.S. Companion Animal Health, is probably still our fastest-growing end market. It's probably growing somewhere in the mid-single digits. And Stanley just talked about the dental and medical are probably in the 2 percentage point range, and maybe slightly more slightly less, depending on how you evaluate it. But still a very strong business. We feel like we're not spinning it off because we dislike the business. We spun it off, and we talked about this, really to create shareholder value. And we feel like that's still a very important theme that we will be able to execute to. The shareholder value comes from unlocking shareholder value comes from: one is multiple arbitrage because pure-play Animal Health companies carry just a larger valuation, a higher valuation, than what's embedded within Henry Schein; and there's $100 million of synergies by the end of the year 3 with merging with the Vets First Choice business. So those 2 things will create significant shareholder value, we believe. Just on the timing of it. The timing is on target. We've said since day 1, late this year or early Q1. We're probably now closer to early Q1. But it's going very well. We've filed the initial registration statement. We filed it on a confidential basis because there was still some missing information. But we wanted to accelerate the timing of getting comments from SEC, which obviously have to go through that process. We've already responded to the SEC comments. We're and they were relatively light, which is good. We are getting ready to resubmit the registration statement with now the Q3 numbers because the Q2 numbers were the only numbers available when we did the initial filing. We would expect the registration statement will flip into a public document sometime in early to mid-December. So we're on track really to complete the transaction as we planned. We're the open items in the registration statement are just the details on the financing for the SpinCo business to pay the dividend back to Henry Schein and a couple of other smaller items. So we're really in good shape right now. Still a lot of work, and we still have to keep our diligence in moving this along quickly. But we feel very good about the timing and the ability to execute probably in the late January time frame.
