History and Milestones

Consolidated Communications traces its roots to 1894 with the founding of Mattoon Telephone Company by Dr. Iverson A. Lumpkin, the great-grandfather of the company's Chairman Richard A. Lumpkin. Through a succession of mergers and acquisitions, the 175-customer telephone company grew to become one of the largest, privately owned telephone companies in the U.S. In the mid-80s, the company's owner formed Consolidated Communications Inc., under which new subsidiaries began providing data/private line, mobile, telemarketing, directory publishing, competitive operator and long distance services. In 1997, Consolidated Communications Inc. merged with McLeodUSA, a super-regional competitive local exchange company. In July 2002, an investment group headed by Illinois Consolidated Telephone Company (ICTC) Chairman and President Richard A. Lumpkin, entered into an agreement to purchase ICTC and other related businesses from McLeodUSA. On Dec. 31, 2002, the sale became final and the company name returned to Consolidated Communications, Inc. Consolidated Communications purchased the former TXU Communications in April 2004, and in July 2005, Consolidated Communications became a public company trading under the NASDAQ symbol CNSL.
