ACQUISITION STRATEGY – APPLIED OPTICS CENTER (AOC) CASE STUDY $6 MM of proceeds expected to be used for acquisitions Time: 11/3/2014 Consideration: $1.01 MM Offer: 100% cash Valuation: - 0.19x LTM Revenue - 0.36x Net Assets Business Lines : precision optical assemblies; military thin film coating 27 full time employees $2.78 MM worth of net assets and $2.0 MM backlog at the time acquisition Optex was able to fully utilize its network enabling it to identify and make acquisitions at a bargain price during the ongoing consolidation trend in the defense sector AOC was Optex’s preferred supplier of laser coatings and laser coated filters in support of Optex’s periscope shipments Previously Optex has ordered $500K - $1.5 MM per year of products from AOC. AOC will continue to support L3/Insight production Optex is a market leader in the military - grade optical products industry that directly utilizes the manufactured components specific to the AOC product line The AOC business of L - 3 had a recent history of losses also due to sequestration As a result, L - 3 intended to exit the optical coating manufacturing business completely in that it no longer fit its business strategy Transaction Past Relationship Target: AOC Bargain Price Rationale 15

OPTEX MARGIN DRIVERS Acquisition Synergies Gross margin increases as Optex and AOC manufacturing capacity is currently under utilized Economy of scale - material costs from suppliers also trend lower Preferred Supplier Status Optex and AOC have multiple products where they are the only suppliers on record for the last 10 - 15 years Commercial Market Expansion Patented / IP Protected Products Premium pricing from Optex and AOC's IP protected products - DDAN, M17 D/T, day windows, etc. 16
