The following is an excerpt from Webster Financial Corporation's Third Quarter Earnings Conference Call held on October 22, 2009:

James C. Smith, Chairman & CEO:

As we announced last week, Warburg Pincus has completed its $115 million investment in Webster common stock, preferred stock, and warrants. We shortly will be scheduling a special shareholders meeting to gain approval for Warburg's preferred to convert into common.

While we have talked with many of you about the Warburg Pincus investment, I want to reiterate why we are so pleased with this transaction. First, this was not a case where we decided to raise capital, and Warburg happened to walk by our door.

Our relationship with Warburg Pincus and Dave Coulter, who runs Warburg Pincus' Financial Services practice, began more than two years ago during an informal meeting on an unrelated matter. While we never could have guessed that Warburg Pincus would one day become our largest shareholder, we stayed in contact and over time became increasingly comfortable with one another. We found that we share a common perspective on what will constitute a successful regional banking strategy focused on New England.

So, when we decided to explore raising capital, it was only natural that Warburg Pincus would be among those we contacted. The duration and quality of our relationship had a favorable bearing on the investment terms, since Warburg Pincus had gained an appreciation for Webster's strong franchise and our regional strategy as well as the quality of the loan portfolio and the depth of the management team. My point is that Webster and Warburg Pincus understand each other very well, share a long-term focus, and are completely aligned on the belief that successful execution of our strategy to be New England's bank will create significant shareholder value.

We are pleased to have one of the marquee names in private equity as our largest shareholder. Warburg Pincus' track record of bank investing, which includes Mellon, Dime and others, is legendary. Their thorough due diligence, which drew on the expertise of JPMorgan Chase, Promontory Financial Group, Ernst & Young, and Sullivan & Cromwell, as well as Warburg's own extensive capability, convinced them that Webster's long term potential for shareholder value creation warranted a premium to market. More than one investor has remarked that Warburg's investment has amounted to the financial equivalent of the Good Housekeeping Seal of Approval for Webster. It certainly has triggered interest in Webster from investors who previously weren't holders of our shares.

Terms of the Warburg Pincus investment should also please our investors. Issuance price for Warburg Pincus' common shares represented a 12 percent premium to the ten-day trailing average for our shares and nearly a 20 percent premium to the 20-day trailing average at the time it was announced. The investment resulted in minimal dilution to tangible book value and modest dilution to normalized e.p.s., and was struck on terms that we believe were considerably more favorable than we could have achieved otherwise in a common equity raise.

In addition, Dave Coulter has joined our Board of Directors. As you may know, Dave is the former chairman and CEO of Bank of America and former vice chairman of JPMorgan Chase, among other notable achievements. We know Dave well and have very high personal and professional regard for him. I can tell you that in addition to his valuable service as a member of the board, he has also proven to be a valued mentor and coach.

Following our very successful exchange offer in Q2, the Warburg Pincus investment boosted our already solid regulatory capital levels well above the median for our peers and brought our pro forma September 30 Tier 1 common-to-risk-weighted-assets ratio to 6.93 percent, bringing us closer to the June 30 median of the top 50 U.S. commercial banks and up more than 125 basis points from year-end 2008.

The bottom line is that while our capital levels had been well in excess of regulatory requirements all along, our Tier 1 Common and tangible common ratios were not. The opportunity to boost these levels on highly favorable terms and put to rest any questions about tangible common equity levels was compelling. We can now say confidently that our capital ratios across the board position us well not only to weather the economic storm but also to grow once our regional economy rebounds.

The market's reaction to our capital actions speaks for itself. Since the day before we announced the exchange offer, our shares are up 74 percent compared to an increase of 5 percent for the KRX index, which is comprised of peer banks ranked from 25th to 74th in terms of asset size. Since late July when we announced the Warburg investment, our shares have risen 32 percent versus 9 percent for the KRX. Year-to-date, Webster shares are have declined 8 percent compared to a 30 percent decline for the KRX. To be sure, there's a lot more to be done to restore the value lost in the downturn. The point here is that our capital actions have ignited a relatively strong share price performance.
