Dear colleagues,

As you will probably have seen, Barclays have today launched their official offer for us, the details of which can be found on the Barclays website. The Barclays offer period opened this morning and will close on 4 October 2007.

There have also been some developments in the offer from the consortium of the Royal Bank of Scotland (RBS), Fortis and Santander. Both Banco Santander and Fortis have now held Extraordinary General Meetings (EGMs) to vote on their acquisition plans for us, and in both cases their shareholders have approved the financing required to fund their plans. RBS is still to hold its EGM, and it is planned for this week on Friday 10 August.

On Sunday, we issued a joint statement with the consortium about recent media misrepresentations. I was misquoted in a Dutch newspaper as having given advice to Fortis shareholders on how to vote at their EGM, which I did not. The consortium has accepted my assurances and we've agreed to continue a constructive dialogue to resolve any outstanding questions and maintain a level playing field for all the parties involved.

Now that the parties have formally launched their bids, we are in a new phase of the process. It is in the interest of our shareholders to receive additional information and be able to ask questions about the bids. Accordingly we've announced yesterday that our informative EGM will take place on 20 September.

The role of our EGM in the overall process is to allow shareholders to gather information which will assist them in making their own decision about the offers. There will be no vote as such on the offers, but shareholders will make their preference known by tendering their shares to one or the other offeror. When the offers close in the first week of October, the preference of the shareholders will become evident once the number of shares submitted to each party has been counted. More information on the EGM will be published on the Group Intranet site closer to the date.

I've been trying to provide regular updates over the last few months as and when information has become available, resulting in almost weekly communications from me. I think the next few weeks will be a bit less active with regards to strategic developments. Following the RBS EGM this week, the next significant step in the process will be in September, when both our own and the Barclays' EGMs take place. Of course, things change rapidly in the situation we find ourselves in, and the path we are following is not always predictable. Therefore, should any material developments arise, I'll let everyone know.

Kind regards,

Rijkman Groenink
Chairman of the Managing Board
